Market Comment

- 2022 began on a volatile note as the hawkish shift taken by several key central banks towards the end of last year extended further. One of the main messages delivered by Fed Chair Powell was that this tightening cycle will be different to the gradual hiking cycle that began in 2015, where he chose not to rule out the possibility of a 50bp hike in March or hiking at consecutive meetings in contrast to the general consensus which has been for a gradual, quarterly hiking pace.
- Markets also priced in risks of a more hawkish ECB meeting given rising inflation concerns as energy prices continued their march higher as geopolitical tensions between Russia and Ukraine escalated.
- We therefore saw government bond yields rise sharply in January as the market further re-priced their expectations for central bank tightening with more than five hikes priced for the Fed by the end of this year and two hikes priced for the ECB at the time of writing. Such developments led to US 10-year yields rising by 27 bps in January in a move that was fully driven by real rates, which rose to their highest level since March 2021.
- This real rate move weighed on risk markets, with equities coming under significant pressure on the back of a large sector rotation which saw Growth names weaken aggressively, whilst Value outperformed.
- Credit spreads followed suit with US Investment Grade spreads widening by 13 bps and European spreads were 9 bps wider on the month. Economic data released during the month generally saw a further moderation given the impact of the Omicron Covid wave in December, as observed through the ISM Manufacturing and Services prints which disappointed relative to expectations and also likely weighed on sentiment.
- February was the weakest month for credit market since the Covid-19 outbreak in 2020. The weakness was driven by the Ukraine situation, where the Russian invasion and subsequent severe International, and in particular European, sanctions created uncertainty for the economic outlook.

Performance Review

- During Q1, the fund returned -10.51% versus -5.36% for the MSCI AC World Index net of fees (Institutional share class).
- Managers focusing on Technology and health care and more particularly on the ageing population theme posted strong relative returns over the quarter.
- Our manager focusing on Environment and Water investing posted absolute negative figures.
- Q1 was a good quarter for Value style in general and lower quality stocks. By nature, we tend to favour managers focusing on higher quality stocks.

Portfolio Activity

- While remaining wary of valuations, overall uncertainty surrounding war in Ukraine and inflation pressures prompted us to reduce overall regional and sector biases in the portfolio
- During the first quarter we reduced our overall exposure AI and robotics as valuations looked rather expensive.
- We also changed a manager to allocate to the ageing population theme.
- During Q1 we sold our exposure to smart materials.

Outlook

- Although COVID-19 concerns have eased since the start of the year, which has allowed for the global reopening of economies to continue, the Russia-Ukraine crisis has begun to reshape the geopolitical and economic outlook. Geopolitical tensions, persistent supply constraints and less accommodative monetary and fiscal policies will likely lead to a decline in global economic growth from 5.8% in 2021 to around 3% in 2022 and 2023. Activity in regions such as Europe and Latin America will be softer as countries struggle with either a greater impact from the Russia-Ukraine crisis or higher deficits and inflation rates, whilst the US economy should outperform. At a global level, rising energy prices and persistent supply chain disruptions should continue to keep inflation elevated throughout most of the year, with further pressure in some countries to come through tight labour markets driving wage growth. As a result, global inflation is expected to rise from 3.9% in 2021 to around 6.5% in 2022, before slowing back to 3.5% in 2023, where this year's strength in inflation is likely to force most central banks to tighten their monetary policies further.
- Across major countries, the United States will stand out. Despite the impact of higher food and energy prices, less supportive monetary and fiscal policies and weaker growth in export markets, the United States economy should remain relatively solid. Strong labour market conditions coupled with robust household and business balance sheets should provide resilience and help maintain private demand and investment. Meanwhile, the Eurozone and United Kingdom economies will likely contract in the second quarter of the year as fiscal policy is unlikely to be enough to prevent a slowdown in activity driven by a greater impact from the Russia-Ukraine crisis, which is squeezing real households' incomes. Provided geopolitical tensions moderate however, economic growth in Europe should resume later in the year driven by a post-Covid-19 rebound in services consumption, declining inflation, and easing supply chain issues. In China, should the government stick to its zero-Covid policy, new outbreaks of COVID-19 will continue to keep industrial production and household consumption subdued, preventing a swift rebound in economic activity. While threats to activity from virus infections, high corporate debt and the weak real estate market remain, the government will continue to support economic growth via easing monetary policy measures, accelerated infrastructure investment and tax rebates for firms in an attempt to achieve its 5.5% growth target for 2022, for which risks currently appear to the downside.
- During the first quarter of the year, the Fed accelerated its hawkish shift given that they have been consistently surprised to the upside by the extent and duration of the current inflationary pressures, coupled with their increased confidence in the strength of the labour market, which Fed Chair Powell described as extremely tight. For example at the March meeting, the Fed's updated dot plot projections showed the Fed Fund's rate above the neutral rate at 2.8% in 2023, up from 1.6% previously. Whilst the Fed had previously been expecting inflation to cool in the second half of the year as supply side damage begins to heal, given uncertainty around the timing of this now, Powell said they will instead be looking at actual progress on supply side constraints, rather than assuming a significant near-term relief. Despite current pricing indicating a terminal rate for the Fed of above 3% now, we still see a possibility of the market pricing in a more aggressive hiking cycle in the near term given the Fed's frustration with inflation.
- China's zero cases policy following the country's strict adherence to Covid Zero could further damage the economy by impacting its activity or could turn into a more benign endemic virus, leading to a "stop and go" on activity especially in the largest manufacturing hubs.
