Investment case

Why invest in global SMID caps at all times

- Strong growth option giving access to companies in the 'sweet spot' of their business cycle
- Lack of analyst coverage and investor attention creating opportunities to discover hidden gems
- Diversification benefits vs. large & mega caps:
 - Exposure to different return drivers – 25-year average equity premium earned by the MSCI World SMID Cap Index over the MSCI ACWI Index: 2.5% p.a., with the same volatility
 - Less valuation risk than growth large caps, mostly overvalued today
 - Less sector bias and fewer diversification issues; more representative of the overall stock markets; more tied up to the real state of the economy
- Diversification benefits vs. emerging markets:
 - Equivalent growth potential with reduced market risk – 25-year average equity premium earned by the MSCI World SMID Cap Index over the MSCI Emerging Markets Index: 4.0% p.a., with lower volatility
 - Less absolute risk and a more diversified universe

Why invest in global SMID caps in the short to medium term

- Outperformance over broader equities during strong, bull calendar years (2006, 09, 10, 12, 13, 17), the only exception being 2019–2020, which was more a function of large-cap growth-driving markets
- Stronger post-crisis rebound potential:

Post-Dot-Com crisis (> Oct. 2002)

Post-global financial crisis (> Mar. 2009)

- Good entry point today as global SMID caps have lagged behind the broader market in recent years (mean reversion potential) and only recently exceeded their own previous highs
