Investment case

The United States is the most liquid, transparent, diverse and global market in the world, accounting for 55% of the MSCI All Country Index weightings. Investing in large-cap US companies also captures returns in the faster-growing emerging markets, as most large-cap US companies are global.

After 11 years of bull market, the recent market sell-off could be a harbinger of a bear market and so we expect a flat to a more modest return in 2020 depending on how serious the monetary policy by the Fed and fiscal policy apparatus are brought to bear to stabilise the markets. We also expect to see some rotations in market leaderships. While the continuing market performance has been led by a handful of blue chips and low-volatility stocks, somewhat defensive sectors are more in demand during bear markets.

With continuing low rates, high-quality and reasonably priced growth stocks are likely to continue to outperform the market. High-quality businesses that generate most of their returns from organic growth and can reinvest capital at high rates of return can grow their earnings, even if the underlying economy is not strong. These types of companies also tend to benefit from secular growth trends such as digital payments, cloud, e-commerce, the aging population and a rising middle class, which should help to buttress their growth in slower economic growth cycles.

Fund concept

The UBAM - US Equity Growth fund is a concentrated portfolio of 35–55 stocks. The investment philosophy emphasises a long-term investment horizon with alpha generation, via bottom-up stock selection. The focus is on identifying and investing in high-quality, established companies with strong, sustainable business models and competitive advantages. Generally, such companies not only have the potential to consistently outperform the market, but they are also inherently less risky. Their superior earnings stability and financial strength should provide a safety margin that typically results in less volatility during declining markets or periods of economic or political uncertainty, thus providing downside protection while taking advantage of market growth.
